Valuation of Matrimonial Property:

When a couple decides to separate, or end their marriage generally the net assets accumulated over the course of their marriage must be divided. In cases where one or both spouses own an interest in a business or property, which cannot be easily determined, a valuation of these interests maybe required.

CHJA professionals include experienced Chartered Business Valuators and an Accredited Real Estate Appraisers who can provide valuations of these assets that are both supportable and defensible.

Determination of Income for Support:

In Canada child and spousal support amounts are determined in accordance with Federal Child Support and Spousal Support Advisory Guidelines. The starting point in calculating payments under these guidelines is an estimate of the income available for support.

In most cases the determination of a spouse's income is straight forward. In other cases, estimating income for support can be a more complex exercise. In these cases an income assessment maybe required. Cases where an income assessment maybe required include:

- a spouse is a shareholder in a privately held company;
- a spouse earns income through a partnership or is self-employed;
- a spouse is under-employed;
- a spouse has significant investment or rental income;
- a spouse has significant income that receives preferential tax treatment;
- a spouse earns income in another tax jurisdiction.

CHJA's experienced, multi-disciplinary team includes Chartered Professional Accountants, Chartered Accountants, Tax Specialists, Certified Financial Planners and Chartered Business Valuators. Our team is well positioned to provide accurate income assessments in accordance with Federal Guidelines.
